■ LEGION VOLUNTEERS: A team of local British National Party activists Sussex help sell poppies for Remembrance Day

B RITISH National Party chairman Nick Griffin, has asked all his members, supporters and the general public to volunteer to help the British Legion sell its poppies in the lead up to Remembrance Day.

For the past six weeks, British National Party activists have been out in the High Streets of Britain's cities and towns collecting signatures for the Party's "Bring Our Boys Home" petition, but Mr Griffin has requested that all their efforts are now focused on raising money for our injured and former servicemen.

"Our petition has been a huge success and the public now knows of our opposition to the senseless war in Afghanistan.

"But the British National Party also supports our troops and that is why I want our members to help sell poppies at this most important of times for the British Legion," said the British National Party chairman.

■ £4 billion CUT in Defence Budget costs 40,000 jobs

■ £4 billion INCREASE in Foreign Aid hand-outs

Some might call this treason

SOME 40,000 British people are to lose their jobs because of the defence budget cuts announced last month.

The cuts will result in the scrapping of the Royal Navy's flagship HMS Ark Royal, the mothballing of one of two aircraft carriers being built, the phasing out of UK-built carrier aircraft, the closing down of army bases, and a reduction in the number of standing army personnel.

At the same time as 40,000 British people prepare for a life on the dole because of the Government's cut of £4 billion from the defence budget, Cameron and Clegg have increased the Foreign Aid budget from £9.1 billion to over £13.1 billion. That's the same £4 billion that has cost all the job losses.

This makes it very clear that the Conservative Coalition Government feels it has to put the welfare of foreigners before the interests of its own people. Some might call this treason!

■ BUILT TO MOTHBALL: Britain's new aircraft carrier HMS Prince of Wales

The total budget cuts in the Public Spending Review are set to amount to £83 billion.

With the defence budget cuts alone costing 40,000 jobs, the number of job losses which will be caused by the budget cuts in other departments could well top 1 million.

That's because it is not only the direct civil service jobs which are affected but also ancillary enterprises who employ private workers and are also dependent on state contracts.

The British National Party would not cut British jobs to save the £83 billion needed to get Britain out of the current financial crisis.

We would find the money by scrapping Foreign Aid, stopping immigration, getting Britain out of the European Union and bringing our troops home from wars that have nothing to do with British interests.

"When landing at Heathrow"

Cardinal says what many Britons feel

THE most enlightening pronouncement of Pope Benedict's recent visit to Britain came before the head of the Catholic Church had even set a foot in the country.

And it came from a senior papal aide and not the Pope himself. Cardinal Walter Kasper, had the courage to say what so many visitors to Britain think - arriving at Heathrow airport is like landing in a "Third World" country.

Cardinal Kasper made his remarks during an interview with the German magazine Focus.

He told the magazine: "England

■ LONDON 2010: Do Britons rejoice in this diversity or feel that Britain is becoming like a Third World country?

today is a secularised, pluralistic country. When you land at Heathrow Airport, you sometimes think you have landed in a Third World country."

He then went on to say that Christians were discriminated against in England and cited the example of British Airways banning their staff from wearing a crucifix in case it upset Muslim passengers.

However, Cardinal Kasper went on to praise the determination of Christians in Britain for standing up for their faith in the face of this discrimination.

"Everyone who knows England knows that there is also a great Christian tradition there. Europe wouldn't be Europe any more, when it couldn't preserve this tradition," he said.

Later the Vatican clarified the Cardinal's comments, confirming everyone's initial impression that his "Third World" comment referred to Britain's multicultural society and not to the run-down state of Heathrow Airport.

There was the expected hand-wringing from our church leaders with the Archbishop of Westminster Vincent Nichols saying that he found Cardinal Kasper's remarks "quite inexplicable".

He told the BBC: "This is a very diverse country and we rejoice in that diversity. There's a great richness of people and of cultures and of contributions made in British society and they are an enrichment."

'Troops Home' campaign launched in Kent

BOTH British National Party MEPs Nick Griffin and Andrew Brons, were guest speakers at a British National Party meeting in Royal Tunbridge Wells last month.

The meeting was held to launch the BNP's Bring our Lads Home campaign in the Kent region.

The meeting was chaired by the Party's South Eastern Regional Organiser Andy McBride, who introduced the BNP's fund-raiser Jim Dowson, to the meeting.

Andrew Brons, who prior to becoming an MEP was a college lecturer in politics and law, spoke on the decline in standards of education and the political agenda that was specifically being taught in schools.

"The state control of such institutions, which, by the indoctrination of our students to Marxist ideologies, makes it almost impossible for free thinking peoples to voice an opinion without criminalizing themselves," he told the meeting.

After a break, Nick Griffin took the floor and explained the reasons for the national campaign, citing the British National Party's opposition to the illegal wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

He said that in the wars of the 20th Century our Army, Air Force and Royal Navy were called upon to defeat an enemy who threatened our sovereignty and way of life.

"But how can we justify the war against Iraq?" he asked the audience.

"It's a war based on lies and it has seen hundreds of thousands of Iraqi men women and children killed just so that America and Britain can enforce their particular form of democracy on that unfortunate country."

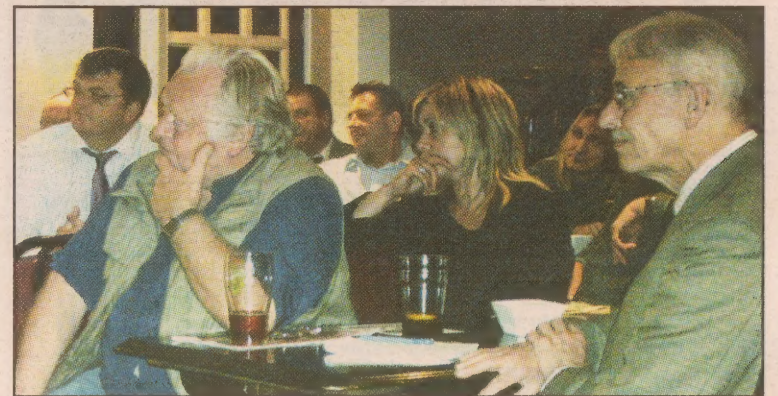

Nick said that the war in Afghanistan was no different. That country had never threatened or attacked Britain or America.

"This war was embarked upon because American and British politicians claimed that terrorist attacks were being perpetrated by terrorists from Afghanistan.

"But this is yet another lie," said the MEP

"The London tube bombings were carried out by home grown, third generation Pakistani, Islamists and the Twin Towers attack by third generation Saudi Islamic radicals.

"Not one Afghan was involved and that is why we should not be waging war in Afghanistan."

Nick explained that it was important to take our 'Troops Out' campaign to the High Streets of Britain, to show that the BNP supports our troops and cares about all our servicemen and women.

"The British National Party wants our troops to secure our borders. Our troops should only be used for the protection of Britain and the British people and to fight wars such as the Falklands War, when our sovereign territories are invaded by an aggressive enemy," he said.

Both MEPs had arrived in Kent direct from Brussels where they had been attending their Committee Sessions of the European Parliament.

■ ANDREW BRONS: Said it is now impossible to voice an opinion

■ NICK GRIFFIN: We should not be waging war against Afghanistan

South Wales BNP told of an illegal & immoral war

■ GUEST SPEAKER: James Whittall accompanied by fiancée Christina

SOUTH Wales British National Party kicked off the launch of their 'Support our troops, bring our boys home' campaign last month with a well attended meeting deep in the heart of the Valleys.

The meeting, hosted by Gwent BNP, was held in Garndiffiath, which is near to Pontypool, and around sixty members from the area listened to speeches by three speakers and discussed plans for town centre activities in various parts of South Wales to be held over the next few weeks.

Chairman for the evening was Welsh Regional Organiser Brian Mahoney, who commented on some of the week's news. This included Cardinal Kasper's remarks that Britain is a third world country, Nicolas Sarkozy's embarrassment over French policy in dealing with Roma gypsies and Thilo Sarrazin, of the German Bundesbank who is now under attack for publishing a book critical of the Islamification of Germany.

Jennie Noble spoke on the need to defend Christian values in the face of relentless attacks on our Christian heritage and John Powell from Gwent BNP gave a well researched talk based on nationalist ideology.

The guest speaker was James Whittall from West Midlands BNP and he had the gathered audience enthralled with his account of the Battle of Shrewsbury in 1403 and the subsequent analogy with events today, leading to the immoral and illegal war our troops are now part of in Afghanistan.

The enthusiasm for the Troops Home Now campaign amongst those present was tangible, and the British National Party in Wales is ready, and raring to get its message over to the public.

BNP postcard campaign stops Shepshed incinerator

by Wayne McDermott

THE British National Party has won its battle against a proposed incinerator in Shepshed.

At the end of October, Leicestershire county councillors turned down the planning application and their report mentioned the influence of the BNP's postcard.

Charnwood BNP Organiser Kevan Stafford designed the 'No to the Incinerator' postcard and was delighted by its success.

"I never imagined so many people would support our campaign," he told Freedom.

529 local residents signed the British National Party postcard and sent it in to the Planning Office. BNP county councillor for Coalville Graham Partner, who has been campaigning against

ARTIST'S IMPRESSION:
The proposed incinerator
at Shepshed, successfully opposed by the BNP

incinerators across Leicestershire, spoke out against the application at the meeting and was pleased it was defeated by 8 votes to nil.

Waste has to go somewhere and landfill is running out, but incineration is not the answer. Britain imports far too much which increases packaging waste. If we returned to producing food and goods locally, which is fundamental to BNP policy, then the need for incineration would not exist.

This news will be welcomed by the residents of Shepshed, but now the battle moves on to stop an incinerator in Bardonia where the successful postcard will be delivered to homes surrounding the proposed site.

Campaign to get ritually slaughtered meat labelled

RECENT reports in the newspapers about Halal food being sold in supermarkets without being labelled, has prompted Rob Walker, the British National Party's West Northamptonshire Organiser, to start a campaign to change the law.

Rob sent a letter to Trading Standards and DEFRA which came straight to the point.

"In times when food labelling takes into account all kinds of dietary and allergy advice, I find it hard to believe that there is no law that covers religious requirement.

"As a Christian I am deeply concerned that I cannot buy my meat safe in the knowledge that it has been humanely slaughtered."

Trading Standards replied that under the Meat Products Regulations 2003, there was no requirement to provide information as to the method of slaughter.

Two days later there was a reply from DEFRA which said:

"This is a complex and sensitive issue. We would like to see all animals stunned before slaughter but respect the rights of the Jewish and Muslim communities to express their religious beliefs.

"People should know what they're buying, and Ministers

ROB WALKER: Is asking people to write to DEFRA will be discussing with the food industry whether labelling can play a greater role in giving consumers a choice."

Rob would like the readers of Freedom to write to DEFRA so they get the full force of feeling from the British public on this highly important matter.

Campaign helps save park loos!

THERE is welcome news of a small victory for commonsense and the people of Louth in Lincolnshire.

In the town there is an old park called Hubbards Hills that is used by thousands of visitors and locals each year.

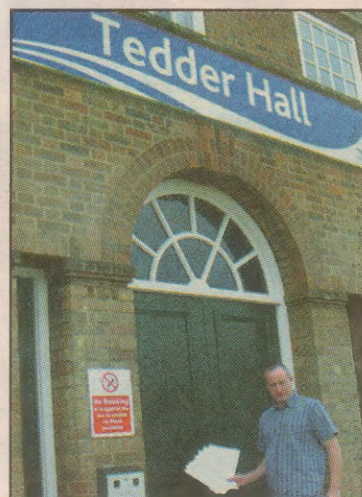

The council were refusing to fund the upkeep of the public toilets in the park and these were going to have to close on 1st October.

This would have had a detrimental effect on the environment with visitors having to find somewhere else in the park to use when nature called.

During a recent by-election, local BNP candidate Jez Boothman, pledged to campaign to save the loos from closure.

He organised a petition and local British National Party members collected 184 signatures which was then handed in to East Lindsey District Council.

GLOBALISATION CANKERS OUR CONKERS

■ UNWANTED IMPORTS: Eastern European lorries queuing up at the Turkish border. Many are bound for Britain bringing the Leaf Miner Moth with them. (RIGHT) It's not autumn, just a sick horse chestnut tree

Lorries from Eastern Europe bring tree disease to Britain

by Steve Johnson

GLOBALISATION isn't just strangling our economy and taking our jobs, it's also killing our trees.

Tens of thousands of horse chestnut trees across Britain are dying thanks to diseases introduced because of the free global trading market.

Across swathes of England at the height of last summer, it looked as if autumn had come early as horse chestnut tree leaves all turned rust brown and shrivelled.

The trees were being ravaged by the caterpillars of the Horse Chestnut Leaf Miner moth, Cameraria ohridella.

This moth was first found in Macedonia in the Balkans, near Lake Ohrid, in the 1980's but thanks to the endless flow of Eastern European trucks pouring into Britain since EU enlargement in 2004 it's now here in Britain.

This foreign immigrant pest blights our landscape and weakens our trees, but doesn't usually kill them. That is left to another immigrant pest brought by the global market: bleeding canker.

This is caused by a bacterial infection, due to the germ Pseudomonas syringae pathovar aesculi. Pae for short. This causes huge bleeding cankers on the trees and can kill them in one or two seasons.

Pae originated in a relative of the horse chestnut native to India, and got here through the global trade in plants and plant products.

So serious is the devastation of our country's horse chestnut trees now that schoolchildren are having difficulties finding healthy conkers with which to play their good old traditional playground game. Even the organisers of the World Conker Championship held each year near the village of Ashton in Northamptonshire are getting concerned.

But it isn't just conkers that the global free market economy threatens. As Dr Sarah Green, a tree pathologist with the Forestry Commission's Forest Research division pointed out recently:

"There has been an unprecedented rise in invasive plant diseases, possibly linked to the rise in international travel and in the global plant trade."

The next foreign plague brought to our shores by globalism may not just kill conkers.

It may kill wheat, or potatoes, or cabbages. Or cows, or pigs. Or people.

Next time you look at a horse chestnut tree decked out in autumn gold in July, think of the classic vintage TV series Survivors.

The terrifying global pandemic it depicts fictionally will happen in fact one day, if we carry on as we are doing.

Britain needs to leave the European Union and protect our industry and our economy from globalisation - not just to save our trees and our crops but to safeguard our very future.

■ SUFFERING: Britain's horse chestnut trees. Injured by a moth imported from the Balkans and killed off by bleeding canker disease imported from India

Burkas on the riverbank

by Simon Williams

THE Environment Agency (EA) has decided that the British angling community is much too 'White'.

To remedy this, it is ploughing rod licence fees into a project called 'Angling 2015', which aims to entice 200,000 people, most of them ethnic minorities and women, into fishing.

Anglers can be forgiven for feeling a little puzzled about the way the Environment Agency spends their licence fees, given that the agency has failed to adequately patrol the banks of rivers that are repeatedly poached and plundered by Eastern European immigrants.

As a former course fisherman who used to pay for rod licences, I was led to believe that my licence fee enabled the Environment Agency to improve and maintain the ecology of river systems, to the benefit of anglers and the species therein. Our money was not meant for ultimately futile social engineering projects.

The EA seems to have a vision of Burkha-clad women lining the canals of former industrial cities.

Those of us with greater sense of cultural awareness, know it's just that, a vision, never to be a reality.

What We Stand for

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with many more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Much tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of capital punishment for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the £billions wasted in foreign aid to fund 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the European Union for the restoration of an effective National Health Service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union to restore Britain's freedom. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside. A ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need, an end to field trials of GM crops, and the restoration of our 200 mile fishing limit.

FAIR PLAY FOR ENGLAND: The setting up of an English Parliament to give England the same right of self-determination within the United Kingdom as enjoyed by Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: An major expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The introduction of referenda and direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Forces and cost jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last policy. Like all the other democratic political parties, the British National Party includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of Labour, the Tories and the Lib-Dems. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

The real crisis is Peak Oil

LAST month in Brussels during the debate on European Union action on oil exploration in Europe, Nick Griffin made the following contribution:

"The real significance of the Deepwater disaster is being missed.

"The real question is why is BP drilling for oil through 5,000 metres of rock, in water 1,500 metres deep, in the middle of a hurricane zone?

"The answer is Peak Oil - the point at which we've used the half of the world's oil reserves that were easy, safe and cheap to produce, and now rely on shrinking reserves, which are increasingly inaccessible, dangerous and expensive, both financially and environmentally.

"It's time for the EU to take its head out of the sand, stop obsessing about Climate Change, and study and address the real crisis: Peak Oil."

Marianne courts Nick

NICK Griffin is to be interviewed by the prestigious French weekly political magazine, Marianne.

The interview will be to seek Nick's opinion on the growing evidence, identified by experts on European politics, that nationalist political parties are having a much greater influence today on mainstream politics.

Paris-based Marianne has a circulation of 300,000 copies per week which peaked at 580,000 with French news magazine record breaker, "The True Sarkozy" (right) in April 2007.

AS a youngster Nick Griffin recalls visits to Lowestoft and seeing the harbour packed with trawlers and the docks alive with men shifting boxes of fish and men and women gutting and packing the catch.

Now it's a ghost port, with the EU scratching around for proposals to revitalise it.

The same is true of ports like Fleetwood all along the North West coast. So the MEP was delighted to be able to speak up on behalf of our surviving fishermen and for a future when we nurture our depleted fish stocks back to being a major national resource once more.

This was part of his speech to the European Parliament on fishing policy:

"It is worthwhile taking a critical look at the European Union's record on the management of the seas.

"Inevitably, this means assessing the situation in the former sovereign UK waters and fishing grounds secretly betrayed to European bureaucracy control in 1973, since nearly 70% of so-called EU fishing stocks are actually British fishing stocks.

EU has fished British waters to extinction

"How have our fish and our fishermen fared under the Common Fisheries Policy?

"88% of the EU's stock is over-fished, against a global average of about 27%. 30% of our fish species are now officially "outside safe biological limits" because there are too few adult fish left for normal reproduction.

"Under the CFP's obscene quota system, nearly a million tons of fish are discarded dead into the North Sea alone every year.

Meanwhile the industrial hoovering up of species such as sand eels has led to crashing populations of bird species such as puffins.

"It is time to restore control of the seas and fishing grounds to the sovereign nations whose track record has shown them fit to exercise such stewardship."

EU DESTROYER: Bottom-trawling boats, the majority from EU countries, drag fishing gear weighing several tons across the sea bed, destroying marine wildlife and devastating life underwater

Self-sufficiency drive key to revitalising UK farming

THE European Union's Common Agricultural Policy is due to be reformed in 2013 and farmers in the North West of England want the UK Government to demand more for its investment.

A group has contacted the MEP to highlight the absurdity of the current system, whereby a decision by our Government to save money by cutting agri-environment spending may actually result in a net deficit of funds due to the consequential loss of EU grants.

Responding to the farmers, Constituency Office manager Tina Wingfield, wrote

"In order to ensure our national sovereignty and the right to determine our own destiny, the British National Party demands an immediate withdrawal from the European Union.

"A healthy nation depends on a healthy environment and healthy food. The British National Party envisages a strong agricultural sector and vibrant farming communities as vital to the nations' well-being.

"The regeneration of the family farm as the core structure of our agricultural sector will be encouraged with emphasis placed on self-sufficiency and environmentally sustainable rural communities."

FAMILY FARM: the core structure of our agricultural sector

WEARISIDE: The burning blades later dropped off by a busy road

MEP warns over wind turbine fires

NICK Griffin has pledged to raise the issue of 'self-combusting' wind turbines at his Environment, Public Health and Food Safety (ENVI) Committee, after being contacted by environmentalists concerned at the increasing number of incidents.

"Increasing numbers of burning wind turbines certainly bring home the dangerous and unpredictable nature of these huge machines," warned the MEP.

"I shall certainly be highlighting the issue in my campaign material as these monstrosities are spreading across my North West of England constituency at a rate of knots."

Transmission Failure

There have been over 150 wind turbine fires which are caused by a failure in transmission. To date no gear oil has been invented to withstand the pressures produced within these units.

One spectacular wind turbine fire occurred in a 200ft structure at the Wind Factory by the Nissan car plant on Wearside.

The fire was so fierce that all three 75-ft long fibreglass blades dropped off and thick black smoke could be seen for miles around.

Almost 200 people dialled 999 to alert emergency crews as flames engulfed the turbine.

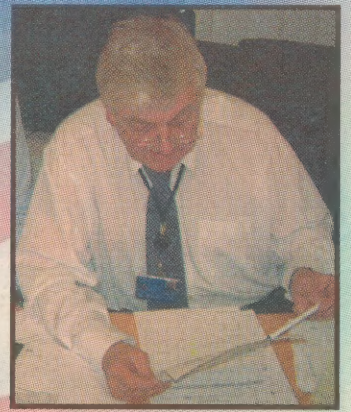

Police closed both the A1231 and the A19 for an hour-and-a-quarter amid worries that parts of the metal tower could fall onto the busy roads.

ANDREW BRONS MEP

Yorkshire & North-East Lincolnshire

VISIT THE WEBSITE . . . www.andrewbronsmep.eu

THAT'S what Andrew Brons told fellow MEPs during a debate on the future of Europe.

He criticised the unrelenting push towards European integration with the single market and the Euro-zone.

He said that the European Union was trying to impose unity and expecting the populations to comply.

"This is a Marxist approach to democracy. The people cannot be trusted to express their wishes. Their political leaders must articulate their objective needs and interests and these needs and interests must replace their wishes.

"If the Eurocrats say that European integration is in everybody's interests, then their desire for European integration can be taken for granted," he said.

Andrew helps injured soldier

ANDREW Brons has helped an appeal organised to raise money for a Yorkshire soldier injured in an explosion in Afghanistan.

Despite his service to his country, 26-year-old Aron Shelton from Bridlington was told by the DWP that he was no longer entitled to a disability allowance to run his specially adapted car.

Aron lost a leg in the explosion and suffers from arthritis in the other.

Upon learning of the appeal, Andrew Brons sent a cheque for £1000 from his Community Fund, which was gratefully received.

ARON SHELTON

EU wants to cut our rebate

ANDREW Brons has tackled the European Commission over Britain's Budget Rebate.

In a written question he asked whether statements made by the Commissioner for Financial Programming and Budget, Janusz Lewandowski, calling for an end to the UK's rebate in respect of its annual budget contributions, were a personal opinion or those of the Commission.

The rebate was worth 3 billion Euros this year which was half of what Britain received the previous year.

Over the next four years, Britain's net contribution to the European Union will rise to a staggering £8.2 billion.

Andrew also asked: "Does the Commission support the principles behind the UK's rebate, and is it of the opinion that the rebate should continue indefinitely in view of the UK's role as one of Europe's major contributors to the EU budget, both now and in the past?"

After receiving the answer, Andrew Brons had this to say:

"I have obtained the answer that the Commissioner was not speaking for himself but for the Commission.

"In other words, the Commission wants to cut the UK's rebate even further.

"The Commission excuses itself by admitting our rebate was cut last year to help finance the new member states of the European Union to build up their transport infrastructure.

Meanwhile our own infrastructure is crumbling and our elderly are dying of hypothermia because they can't afford to heat their properties."

MEP makes FIVE speeches in four days in Strasbourg

THE ISSUES: Amongst the topics covered by Andrew Brons; voting in Parliament, Moldova and the banks

LAST year Andrew Brons, was identified by Votewatch.eu as one of the most prolific speakers in the European Parliament.

In a week in October he made no less than FIVE speeches to the Plenary Session in Strasbourg.

■ He spoke in a debate on the Revision of the Framework Agreement on relations between the Commission and the European Parliament saying:

"The power of this Parliament is exercised, disproportionately, by the leaders of the large political groups and the committee chairmen. The ordinary members of these groups have no more independent power than those of us in the Non-Attached group."

■ He spoke during a debate on the European Union Budget for 2011 saying:

"It's madness to continue to pursue expansion to include even poorer and undeniably burdensome countries, including Turkey, which is not only poor but not European by any stretch of the imagination."

■ He spoke in a debate on the forthcoming meeting of the European Council and the G20 Summit saying:

"We need to control the credit-creating activities - that is to say the money-creating activities - of the banks. The banks must serve our economies, must not be allowed to follow their own agenda and must certainly not be our favoured beneficiaries."

■ He spoke in a debate on Financial Instruments saying:

"The additional 176 million Euros will not just be given to the poorest countries but also to emerging countries, whose exports are already and increasingly destroying our manufacturing bases and the jobs of our taxpayers."

* Financial instruments are sums of money that are paid to Third World and Emerging Countries for development co-operation and for the promotion of democracy and human rights.

■ He spoke during a debate on Implemented Reforms in the Republic of Moldova saying:

"Easing of visa restrictions, we are often told by advocates of that easing, has nothing to do with migration, by which they mean legal migration. It will have everything to do with illegal migration - the trafficking of people to work for less than the minimum wage and less than minimum working conditions. It will also deplete that country of people of working age, who might otherwise help to pull that country out of its poverty."

Eurojust erodes independence of member states

EUROJUST is the body that initiates investigations and prosecutions in cases of cross border crime

Andrew tackled Aled Williams, the President of Eurojust on its role in usurping the independence of member countries.

"Could a member state's police force be ordered by Eurojust to spend resources investigating and perhaps searching premises and even arresting suspects, in the case of an alleged cross border offence that was not an offence in the investigating state?"

"I am thinking particularly of anti-free speech laws that might be even more oppressive in some member states than others."

There was no response from Mr. Williams but Christine Defraigne, the Chairwoman of the Committee on Justice in the Belgian Senate, said the long term aim of the EU was for member states all to have the same laws.

Getting the BNP's Message Across!

by Communications Officer John Walker

Troops Home - A Resounding Success

MANY people were surprised when the Party adopted opposition to the war in Afghanistan as its main campaigning issue.

Research has found that around half of the public would give a BNP high street stall a wide berth, but it has also shown more than 80% are opposed to the Afghan War.

This campaign is helping to break down entrenched barriers that will enable the British National Party to break out of the political ghetto which the media has fenced us into.

Not only have we made opposition to the war in Afghanistan OUR issue, every week our petition stalls are changing the public's perception of the BNP.

■ CHANGING PERCEPTIONS: A petition stall in Whitehaven, in Cumbria, is swamped by the public, keen to show their opposition to the war

A New Look for a New Era

WHEN in 2000, as Director of Publicity, I first introduced the BNP's current logo it was a part of a modernisation package designed to gain credibility.

Now that the BNP is established in the mainstream of British politics, the Communications Department is creating a new and modern corporate image and logo for the Party.

Twenty-eight years of relentless media smears has demonised the acronym "BNP". Our research has found that the instant reaction to the BNP logo is, sub-consciously, a negative one. We hope to break this link with the adoption of a fresh logo.

The Advisory Council has given its approval to a new design which will be launched for the New Year to give the British National Party a new and radical image.

Fully Equipped Press Officers

THE challenges for a British National Party Press Officer can be daunting facing a hostile and biased media, but the Communications Department has taken steps to help by equipping each regional Press Officer with a comprehensive database of all regional media contacts.

Several months ago, the party invested in a cutting edge online media database, the kind used by PR agencies and corporations. This system has allowed the Communications team to utilise media data to our advantage launching a new era for nationalist public relations.

Using their new database of media contacts, which is kept up-to-date on an almost weekly basis, our 12 regional Press Officers can now send targeted press releases to their entire region with an impact and a reach that surpasses anything before.

Beyond Capitalism & Communism

DISTRIBUTISM is the British National Party's radical 'Third Way' economic alternative to Capitalism and Communism.

It is working well in Britain as proved by Britain's leading Distributist enterprise, the John Lewis Partnership, a 146-year-old co-operative owned by its 70,000 workforce. It has withstood the recession while its Capitalist rivals on the high street have been left struggling.

Results released in mid-September showed that pre-tax profits at John Lewis have jumped 28%, with the retailer's Waitrose supermarket and online operations in particular reporting strong growth.

In the last six months, John Lewis made profits of £110m on very healthy sales which rose 12.4% to £3.8 billion.

The John Lewis Partnership further bucked the recession by creating 1,900 new jobs in the six months to the end of July.

This all proves, yet again, that our Distributist 'Third Way' is not only attractive in principle as an alternative to Capitalism and Communism. When it is tried in practice, it works better than Capitalism and Communism.

Venezuela & Cuba find the Third Way

THE British National Party's radical Distributist economic policy also works well overseas and is gaining ground across the globe with two Latin American countries, one formerly Capitalist and the other formerly Communist, adopting our ideology.

In Venezuela, a country long in thrall to American oil multinationals, popular nationalist leader Hugo Chavez is turning more and more of the economy over to Distributist workers' co-operatives under the banner of what he calls "21st Century Socialism". Workers here now own, manage and run their workplaces and enterprises and share directly in the fruits of their labours.

In Communist Cuba the Government is also turning to Distributism. The first step was taken in April when, in a pilot scheme, hundreds of state-run barbers' and beauty salons were turned over to their employees.

This proved such a success that in August Cuban President Raoul

■ CUBA: Main export crop sugar cane, is now farmed by a workers' co-op

Castro, gave the move from State control to direct workers' control his official sanction.

In September, the Government announced that workers' co-operatives were to be rolled out across much of the country's economy. State-owned industries, including the major export crop of sugar cane, agriculture, tourism, and public health are being turned over to their workforces as workers' co-ops.

A million Cuban workers will share in owning and running their workplaces, farms and factories.

As one Cuban Government economist put it, reflecting our position precisely, "the role of the state is to be transformed from being the administrator of economic activity to the regulator."

The aim is to replace the old failed Communist model, in which the economy was run by the State in the name of the workers, with the new Distributist one, whereby the economy is run by the workers themselves.

Those, notably in the US, who thought former Communist countries would have no alternative but to collapse exhausted into the arms of the global Capitalist greed machine are getting a surprise as Cuba finds another way.

It was also predicted that Venezuela's escape from their multinational tentacles would end in failure. But Hugo Chavez has found the Third Way, one pioneered in Britain by G.K. Chesterton, Hilaire Belloc and their Distributist League over eighty years ago.

It's a Third Way that the British National Party alone offers the British people today.

BNP - back on the streets of Belfast

by Tom Gower

THE Ulster branch of the British National Party has been out on the streets of Belfast again gathering more signatures for the Bring Our Troops Home campaign.

After a highly successful campaign in Newtownards the previous week which collected over 200 signatures, the team moved into East Belfast and set up stall directly outside the Glentoran Football Club stadium where over 300 signatures were collected.

The British National Party's message of hope and peace certainly struck home in Belfast and this upset Peter Robinson's discredited Democratic Unionist Party (DUP).

Its spokesman Robin Newton, made a ridiculous attack on the BNP's 'Troops Home Now' message in the local newspapers, no doubt concerned that many disenchanted Loyalists who agree might join the Party.

"It's about time the BNP came to Belfast," was the message those collecting signatures heard over and over again, so it was hardly surprising that the DUP was worried by the BNP campaign.

Tour and a comedian help to raise the profile of the BNP in Scotland

by Gary Raikes

AFTER a weekend of campaigning in Dundee, the British National Party took centre stage during a comedy show in the city.

A comedian mentioned the BNP as an intro for a joke about politics, but so many cheers went up that he had to instruct the audience not to cheer so loudly for the BNP!

Scotland North-East Organiser Allan Sharp, has been delighted with the higher profile of the BNP in the city but he hasn't sat back on his laurels. He has completed a tour in the BNP Scotland van through several towns in the Aberdeenshire area, assisted by Highland organiser Lynda Davies.

The route took them through Ellon, Peterhead & Boddam, Fraserburgh, MacDuff & Banff, Turiff, Oldmeldrum and Inverurie on one day and then Stonehaven, Gourdon, St Cyrus and Montrose were all visited on the next.

The tour is part of a rolling programme of visits to Scottish towns to show members, supporters and the general public that the BNP is an integral part of Scottish politics.

Lynda Davies told Freedom:

"The van, with its eye-catching BNP logo, has been through Huntly and Elgin on its way to support members in Thurso and Wick, illustrating the BNP is able to campaign the full-length of our country".

A team from Lothians BNP has also been active over the past month, handing out leaflets and selling copies of Freedom in town centres as well as leafleting door to door to spread the BNP's 'Troops Home Now' message to thousands of homes.

Campaigning is under way in Mid-Scotland and Fife with new organiser Andy Martin, as well as in Central Scotland, organised by Joe Finnie.

The Newspaper of the British National Party

EDITOR: Steve Johnson

BNP - Back in business

THE AFTERMATH of a General Election can be a very difficult time for Britain's smaller political parties.

Even when they poll very well, such as the British National Party did in May, the unfair nature of the first-past-the-post electoral system means that winning a seat is highly unlikely.

On top of this, to compete effectively in a General Election requires a lot of money. When that money has been raised and then spent and there is nothing concrete to show for all that effort and all those very good votes achieved, that is a time when small parties like ours can face a few problematic months.

Morale is so important in politics and when morale is low, disillusionment can set in and political activity can grind to a halt.

Sometimes this state of affairs can carry on for 18 months or even two years, until something happens to drag the Party out of the doldrums.

It's not telling tales out of school to say that the British National Party has had a difficult aftermath to the General Election, but thankfully that has been short-lived because of our excellent 'Troops Home Now' campaign which has revitalised the BNP over the past four weeks.

The importance of the campaign cannot be underestimated. Veteran nationalist Martin Wingfield, the editor of more than 250 issues of various nationalist newspapers, says he has never seen a response like it, not just in terms of the number of activities taking place, but also the public's response to these activities. He reports that the 'Troops Home Now' initiative is the most successful campaign he has ever known.

And he is right. It has been successful in raising the profile of the British National Party across the whole of the United Kingdom. It has been successful in getting over our policy of the Afghan war to the public, and it has been successful in raising the morale of our Party activists.

In the pages of this issue of Freedom you can see the extent of our campaigning. Dozens of activity reports have not been included because of lack of space. If your branch or group doesn't get a mention, please except my apologies and hopefully a future activity from your area will be included in the coming months.

Rural Subsidies

VILLAGE life in Britain is "dying out" because rural pubs, village shops and community schools are closing at a record rate.

The British Beer and Pub Association said that 893 pubs closed last year because of the recession, increased taxes and the smoking ban.

Around 400 village shops closed in 2008, while in England, between 1997 and 2008, rural schools shut down at the rate of one a month.

In my village, local families have been priced out of the area by wealthy commuters and second-home owners.

Our pub is the focal point for the village, not just as a social meeting place but as the 'office' for the village sports teams and local groups.

Village pubs, post offices and schools are essential to sustain our rural communities. They should be subsidised by the Government to keep them open.

Grandparents day

ON OCTOBER 1st it was Grandparents Day and I hope your readers remembered the occasion.

Grandparents look after grandchildren so that parents are able to go to work.

Grandparents take their grandchildren to school and baby-sit at a moment's notice.

Grandparents help with a loan when there's a cash shortage.

They are the main carers of children in the world and social services and businesses would be starved of workers if grandparents didn't help.

Please recognise the contribution that grandparents make to your family.

Jimmy Deuchars, Glasgow.

Treaty was treason

PLEASE help Albert Burgess with his campaign to prove Treason was committed by taking us into the EEC in 1972.

Using documents declassified under the thirty year rule he has helped prove a conspiracy was set up to subvert our English Constitution, which is a crime of Sedition under Common Law.

By signing the first treaty, Edward Heath did in fact commit High Treason, as have other Prime Ministers since until the 6th and final treaty was ratified.

Albert wants people to write to the Queen to let her know how we feel about this. Please send all letters to:

Albert Burgess, PO Box 1080, Digby, Lincoln LN4 3NE.

The campaign is becoming a way of people learning what actually took place. The fact that the Foreign & Commonwealth Office were using Civil Servants to write 1000's of pro-EEC letters to be published in our national newspapers, is enough to make me take action.

All letters are going to be delivered direct to Buckingham Palace early in November.
Mike Clayton, Lincoln

EASTBOURNEBNPhavenow had four 'Days of Action' and on the last Saturday there was a long queue of people wanting to sign the petition - around 500 in the morning alone.

As a Northern Ireland veteran, I was heartened to see the response from the public. We will be carrying out further days of action in Eastbourne town centre throughout the coming months in support of our 'Troops Home Now' call.

My thanks to John Robinson, Dave Lloyd and our other dedicated activists for their support.

TUC hits Searchlight

I WAS surprised to hear that the Trades Union Congress has agreed to lobby the Charity Commission to deny charitable status to organisations with "overtly political aims".

The TUC cited the New Schools Network as its particular concern, while the British National Party would point at Searchlight for abusing its charity status.

The TUC argues that organisations that exist for political purposes cannot be charitable - and it is correct.

Searchlight exists solely to campaign against the political aspirations of the BNP and as such cannot be regarded as a charity.

Let's now have some action from the Charity Commission and get Searchlight's charitable status revoked.

Cardiff library

ON a recent visit to Cardiff Library I saw a stall promoting a new Muslim magazine for South Wales, the Cardiff Muslim Times.

At the same time there was an Arabic poetry reading, Arabic music being played and a cooking demonstration of Indian food. The smell of curry permeated the whole building, and the cook's voice on loudspeaker added to the mayhem.

It was like some foreign bazaar taking over a new library that is open plan on 5 levels making it impossible to concentrate.

I, of course, complained and found out that this was the 'brain child' of the newly appointed library manager.

Indeed, even the library staff admitted it was a bad idea which hadn't been popular with those using the library.

Bracknell BNP briefed on global warming

BRACKNELL BNP's latest branch meeting was billed as a global warming briefing and its purpose was to educate activists and supporters.

Peter Kirby spoke for about an hour on the subject, telling the meeting:

"The world is warming but not to the degree that our Government would have you believe. The most important question is what is causing this.

"Prior to 1945 there was very little man-made carbon dioxide yet the temperature was rising.

"Between 1900 and 1998 the global temperature rose by 0.7 degrees centigrade, but since 1998 global temperatures have been falling, he said.

Peter told the meeting that according to the laboratory at Moana Loa in Hawaii, Carbon dioxide has continued to rise at the rate of 2 molecules per million molecules of atmosphere each year, and yet the temperature has fallen.

"This nails the myth that carbon dioxide is causing global warming," he said.

"Carbon dioxide is not a pollutant, it is a beneficial gas without which no life on earth would exist."

Getting councillors elected is the priority of Ashfield BNP

LAST month, at the Miners Welfare Club in Kirkby, Ashfield British National Party held its first branch meeting since the General Election.

The mood was very upbeat after a solid performance in the national poll with BNP candidate Edward Holmes, not only saving his deposit but polling nearly three times as many votes as the UK Independence Party candidate.

Edward told the meeting that although he felt that the British National Party had done well in Ashfield, the Party was still not seen as a real alternative to Labour.

■ REV. ROBERT WEST: Explained about the two different faces of Islam

■ EDWARD HOLMES: Reported on the General Election campaign in Ashfield

"To be taken more seriously by the electorate we must start to get hardworking BNP councillors elected in the District elections next year, and then the County Council elections in 2013," he said.

But he acknowledged that there had been some successes from the General Election campaign and these needed to be built upon.

"The BNP greatly increased its presence across the constituency by holding very successful tabletop sales of the Voice of Freedom.

"We received fair treatment from the local media and forged good working relations with reporters and broadcasters alike.

"We did well at the one hustling

we were invited to and received positive feedback from those who attended and a good report in the local newspaper.

"The branch has come out of the election in a satisfactory financial state with enough funds left to take us into next year's elections," Edward reported to those present.

After a break there was a talk on the Muslim faith by the Reverend Robert West from the Christian Council of Britain in which he clarified the positions of both peaceful Muslims and militant Islam in today's society.

An excellent buffet was provided and the raffle and collection raised over £200.

East Kent out in Ashford

by Dennis Whiting

THE East Kent leafleting team was out and about at the beginning of September delivering 1,600 'Putting British People First' leaflets door-to-door in South Ashford.

The strong team included three new recruits who had joined the British National Party as a result of the local General Election campaign.

One man particularly pleased to be stomping the doorsteps again was first organiser Dave Price. It was his first activity since his leg was badly shattered in a road accident last November.

WHEN a photo of a dog appeared on a local website reporting on the BNP's Troops Home campaign stall in Louth in Lincolnshire it prompted a caption competition to accompany the photo.

The pensive looking black labrador looked very much like the dog in the famous 'Dambusters' film so it was no surprise that the winning caption was: "If only my master, Guy Gibson, had known what would happen to our country after the war, I don't know whether he would have been so keen to risk his life."

Support in 'conservative' Maidenhead

by Andy McBride

WHEN Windsor British National Party organiser Neil Kilbane, took the Troops Home campaign onto the streets of Maidenhead, he reported a good response from what is a very 'conservative' area.

"At least twelve of the petition sheets were completed and 25 copies of Freedom were sold.

"I was amazed at the level of support from the ethnic minorities who were happy to sign the petition," he said.

One gentleman who signed was a scientist. He told Neil:

"As a first generation immigrant, I came to this country with qualifications and on the understanding that I brought something useful which was needed by the British Government. I am grateful for this and the life I am able to lead because of it," he said.

£20 paid for a copy of Freedom

by Mike Wittchell

THE latest port of call for the hard-working Bognor Regis and Littlehampton campaign team was in Bognor Regis itself where a stall was set up on the fringe of the town's Saturday market.

Once again the team received a very warm welcome and positive response. 150 signatures were gathered, and 40 copies of Freedom were sold. This even bettered the previous week's visit to nearby Rustington where 100 signatures were collected.

One of the highlights of the morning was when a lady said that she agreed with our campaign, but didn't want to sign the petition.

However, she did buy a copy of Freedom and insisted on paying £20 for it - is this a record?

Signatures, sales and donations in Aylesbury

HUNDREDS of leaflets were taken by Saturday shoppers in Aylesbury, while copies of Freedom were sold and donations received at the first BNP tabletop sale on the streets of the Buckinghamshire town.

The event was organised by local BNP official Kieren Trent, who was assisted by Oxfordshire organiser Adam Worley.

Over eighty people stopped to sign the Party's petition to withdraw our troops from Afghanistan and to discuss some of the other political issues of the day.

BNP on duty in Devizes

THE British National Party collected 200 signatures in Devizes for its petition demanding the immediate withdrawal of British troops from Afghanistan, and made it into the North Wiltshire Gazette.

That was thanks to Labour councillor Ian Hopkins, who condemned the stall at a town council meeting the following week, calling the BNP "an evil and pernicious organisation that must not be allowed get a foothold in Devizes."

Hopkins wanted the police to take action, but Inspector Andy Noble of Devizes Police said that a patrol had visited the stall during the morning and found leaflets being handed out in a way that any political group was entitled to do.

He was however critical of the member of the public who thought it necessary to call '999' to report the BNP stall at The Brittox.

■ EMERGENCY: Two ladies signing the BNP petition... dial 999!

Ethnic minorities queuing to sign in North Finchley

by Steve Squire

THERE was a fantastic response to the British National Party's 'Troops Home' petition in North Finchley, with 178 signatures collected in just under 3 hours.

The local Party were livid and tried to organise a demonstration against our stall but their Finchley branch could only muster 5 demonstrators and had to be satisfied with setting up a banner opposite us at "Tally Ho Corner".

As they watched the queues form to sign our petition, their jaws must have dropped wide open as scores of ethnic minorities joined the line of people wanting to pledge their support to the campaign.

Great reception in Christchurch

THE Dorset BNP 'Support Our Troops - Bring Our Boys Home' stall in the High Street of Christchurch proved to be exceptionally successful with both local people and holidaymakers.

On a beautifully sunny morning, many people said how pleased they were to see our activists campaigning on an issue that the public feel so strongly about, yet one which the 'Old Gang' politicians refuse to address.

BNP are 'hi-vis' in the Valleys

'Sinking BNP roots' for the Welsh Assembly on the streets of Merthyr Tydfil

EVEN as the BNP stall was being assembled in the town centre, people began queuing up to sign the 'Bring Our Boys Home' petition.

Despite this being the first time that local BNP members had held an event in the town, the response from the people of Merthyr was very supportive with a number of them thanking the campaigners for what they were doing.

Within two hours, over two hundred signatures were gathered and more than a thousand leaflets had been taken. Significantly, they came to sign our petition fully aware that we were the British National Party - so it would seem that the media's anti-BNP propaganda hype clearly isn't working.

Merthyr Tydfil, located at the heads of the Valleys is where the Industrial Revolution began. Let's hope that another revolution occurs here in next year's Welsh Assembly election and a BNP member is elected for the South Wales East region.

Queues in Pontypool

ANOTHER day, another Welsh Valleys town, this time in Pontypool (home of the legendary Pontypool Front Row) where there were queues to sign the 'Bring our Boys home' petition.

Our team of activists spread out along the main street, handing out leaflets to shoppers and stopping to chat with them about the situation with the war in Afghanistan.

Meanwhile, at the other end of South Wales, in Haverfordwest (right) in Pembrokeshire, the team of Wales BNP activists manning the stall there reported the same response.

The campaign in Wales will continue in other parts of the Principality over the next few weeks in the run-up to Remembrance Day.

If you want to be a part of it, or indeed are able to set up stall in the town where you live, contact your local organiser now.

BNP back in Neath

Peter Hain won't like it!

by Clive Bennett

SOUTH Wales activists were out in force on October 10th collecting another 200 signatures for the Troops Home petition, this time in Neath, a former Labour stronghold and the constituency of Welsh Secretary, Peter Hain.

Our table top was busy from the moment we set it up, and with several activists out in the street complete with clip-boards, the signatures came in thick and fast. While this was going on in the town centre, another team was out and about leafleting the area distributing well over two thousand leaflets.

Our Valleys may be green but they are also lean when it comes to employment as most of the heavy industry has closed down, so many local people have joined one or other of the forces as a way of gaining employment.

This made our petition particularly relevant to many of the families in the town.

■ NEATH: BNP petitioners receive a great reception on the high street

Spreading the BNP message in Swansea

ON Sunday 19th September a group of British National Party activists were out leafleting in Swansea as part of the Bring Our Boys Home campaign.

The campaign had been launched in Pontypool three days earlier and on the Saturday there had been a campaign stall in Swansea city centre.

The leafleters, (some of whom are pictured above), were feeling a little footsore and that's not surprising considering they each walked some eight miles during the course of the day.

It was by pure chance that the team were passing the office of Labour Party Welsh Assembly member for Swansea East Val Lloyd, at the end of the activity, so thought it an appropriate place for a photo to record the day's efforts.
